NEW YORK, MAY 10, 1923.

PRICE 10 CENTS.

Ninety Thousand Boys Parade on Loyalty Day

Some of the New York boys who participated in one of the greatest parades that Fifth Avenue, New York, has seen, May 1, passing the Public Library at Forty-second Street. The boys marched with the swing and spirit of veterans and were heartily applauded along the route.
(Wide World Photos.)

NINETY thousand New York boys, according to police estimates, became men on May 1 while "as many men became boys. Traffic ceased upon Fifth Avenue for more than five hours and Mayor Hylan reviewed the largest parade since wartime days. Eddie Meehan, the boy Mayor, and the members of his administration led the procession along the avenue from Seventy-fifth Street to Washington Square. Parents stood, some of them, from 1:30 to 7 o'clock, waiting for a glimpse of their boys. Great crowds lined the sidewalks to watch the youngsters march to the tunes of the boys' bands and singing songs of school days.

There were twelve divisions in the parade, divided into forty-six regiments, with forty-eight bands and two fife and drum corps. The B. F. Keith's Boys' Band followed the officials, who were: Colonel John J. Byrne, Grand Marshal; Louis Bailli, boy Marshal; Eddie Meehan, boy Mayor, and Alfred Cerunda, boy President of the Board of Aldermen. Then came the First Division, headed by Colonel Rhinelander Waldo, the Police Band and the first school unit, Public School 40.

The boys wore long white trousers, white shirts, broad red-and-white bands over their shoulders and red-and-white caps. The tall boys were on the right and the short boys on the left.

There was something of the wartime spirit about the boys. They seemed to be inspired with the responsibility of the day. One little fellow not more than two feet and a half tall led a company of stalwart youths from the upper grades. His head went up and his eyes flashed as he shouted the orders to his company. The ripples of amusement from the crowd at his shrill commands did not disturb him in the least. He faced about after each order and marched steadily on with all of the manner of a real soldier.

When the command "At Rest" was given the boys sang their school songs or hummed popular airs which the bands near them were playing. The boy drum majors swung their batons and looked just as pompous as the leaders of the cadet and regimental bands.

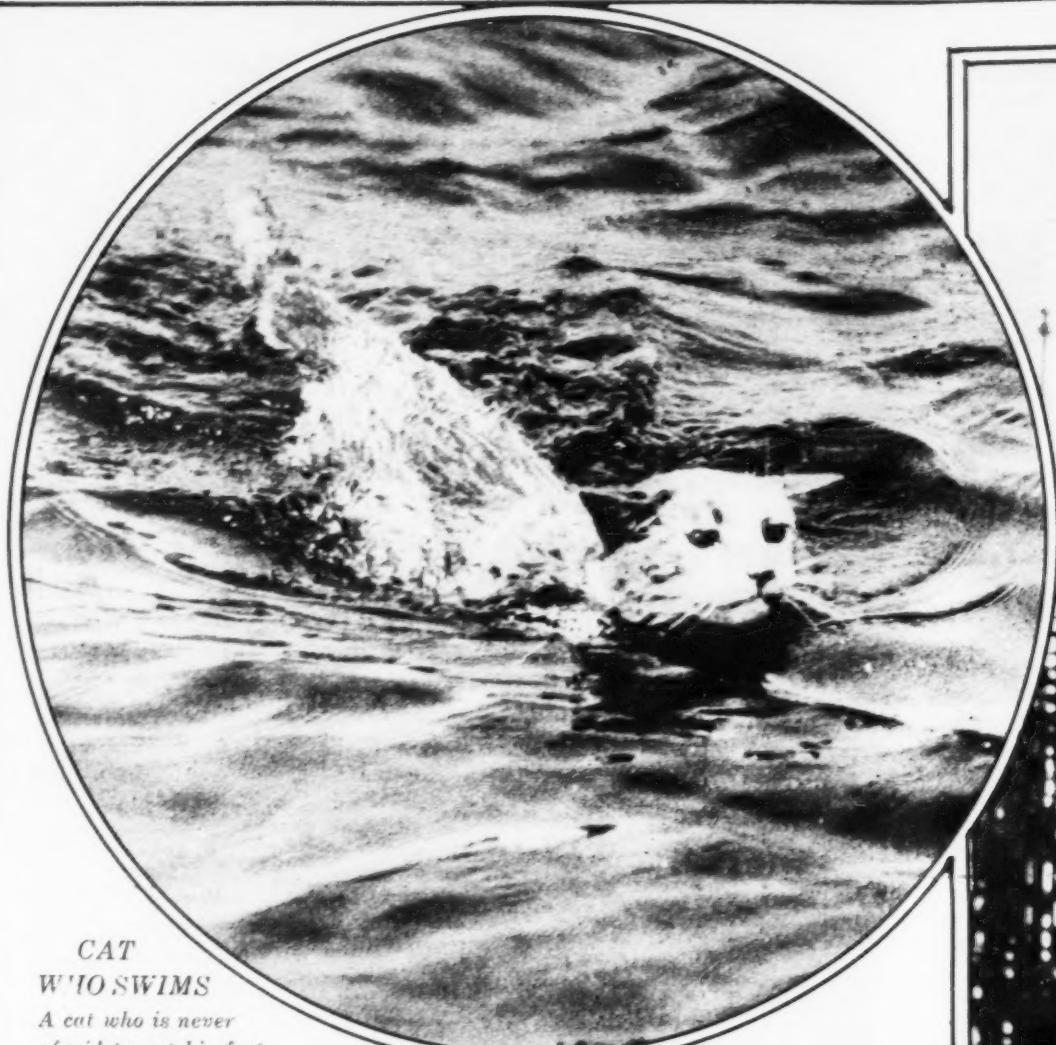

Mayor Hylan, William Church Osborne and Brigadier General George W. Wingate were among those who reviewed the parade from a stand at left of Madison Square and Twenty-fifth Street. Boy Mayor Meehan greeted Mayor Hylan at the reviewing point. Following a cordial handshake, Mayor Hylan said that he was favorably impressed with his youthful substitute and now felt that he could take another vacation this Summer and be sure of leaving the city in good hands.

FLOATS of the settlement houses, which included the Jacob Riis, Clark House, Caristadura House, Henry Street and Sunshine, depicted the recreation and healthful food which is being brought to the children in the settlement districts. The Boy Scouts had a float showing the difference between Gang Rule and Boy Scout Rule. On one side of a fence a gang of street urchins were shooting craps while on the other three boys were seated around a campfire hearing a story of nature lore. On the fence one youngster in a state of indecision first inclined one way and then the other.

The Woodrow Wilson Scouts received many rounds of applause and were cheered several times as a tribute to the ex-President. The boys of Public School 25 carried a company dressed in their swimming suits. An S. P. C. A. ambulance told of the many rescues by school children of small animals.

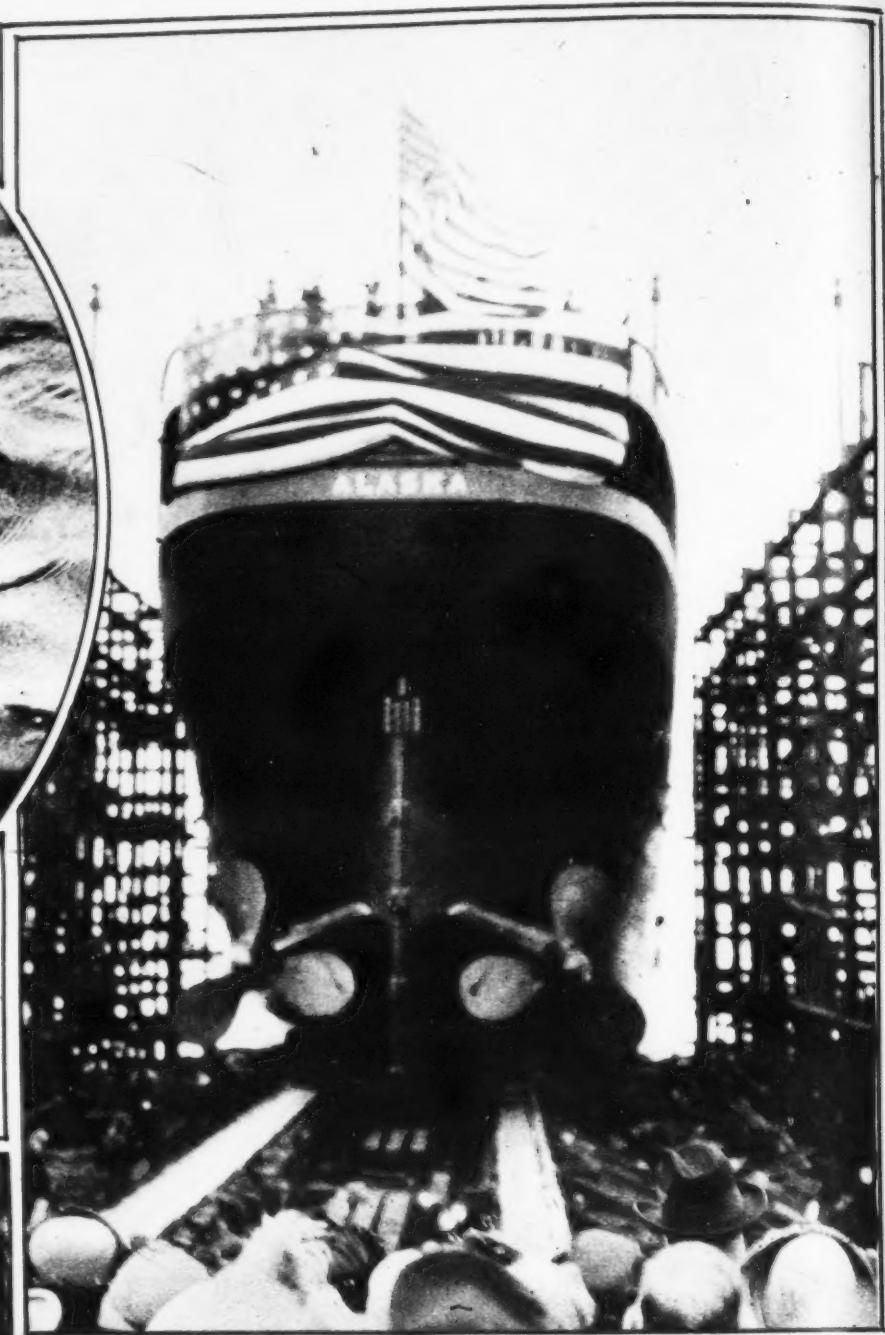

Some boys carried banners reading "Boys Are the Backbone of Our Nation," "Get Acquainted With Boys and Stay Young," and others urging more playgrounds and other recreation facilities.

UNITED STATES TROOPS OFF TO OUR ISLAND POSSESSIONS
Contingent of American troops aboard the United States transport Grant, sailing to take their posts at Panama, Honolulu and Alaska. The vessel will make its first port at San Francisco, where the Alaskan contingent will transfer, while the remaining troops continue on their voyage to Hawaii. (Wide World Photos.)

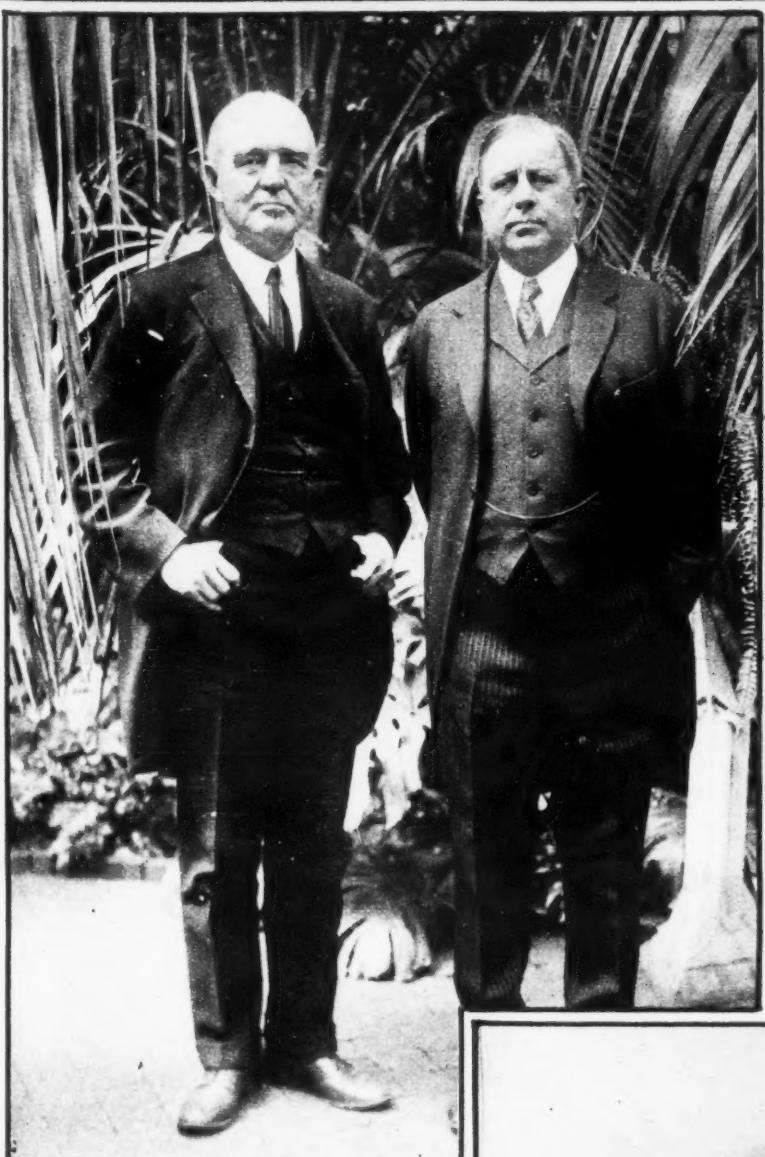

THE antipathy of felines to water for other than drinking purposes is so well known that unusual interest attaches to the cat here pictured, who has risen above the prejudices of his kind and really enjoys a swim. The cat is attached to the House of Correction at Deer Island, in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts. A strong current sweeps past the island so strong, indeed, that more than one prisoner has lost his life in trying to swim from the island to freedom. Ging'e, however, as this cat is named, swims the passage, which is nearly 100 feet wide, twice a day and makes excellent time in effecting the crossing.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS
The fact that the United States is not merely a continental power but has large possessions and outlying territories is emphasized by the picture of the United States transport, crowded with troops, some of whom are destined to Alaska, while others are making a journey to Panama and Honolulu. There is little expectation that they will be used in the military sense, for conditions are peaceful in all the islands and sections over which the United

Although the National Government has taken no steps looking toward a repression of this lawless organization, measures are pending in the Legislatures of several States with an aim to curb their activities. In the Mer Rouge murder case indictments have been returned against a number of the admitted leaders of the Klan in that district, and it is reported that the Louisiana State authorities are determined to press the matter to the utmost in order that justice may be done and the majesty of the law vindicated.

SPRINGTIME

CALIFORNIA
One of the beautiful orchards in full bloom in Central California. There are thousands of these extending through the length and breadth of that favored State, feasting the eye with beauty, making the air redolent with fragrance and furnishing promise of the luscious fruit to be gathered later on and distributed to all parts of the Union, where the size and quality of California fruit have become proverbial.

Tales of Heroism Mark Sinking of Ship in Hurricane

Mrs. P. J. Hudgins, wife of the third mate of the steamship Seacomet and the only woman on board, being lifted up to the deck of the tender Anemone, while other survivors are waiting their turn. She had taken her turn at the pumps of the sinking vessel and had worked as determinedly and courageously as any of the men.

(Wide World Photos.)

ONE of the thrilling stories of a heroic fight by brave men to save their ship, a losing battle in which the lives of seven were probably snuffed out; of a Captain who stuck to his tilted bridge until the smokestacks were level with the waves, and of a woman who, nothing daunted by a terrific storm, played her part as courageously as any of the men, was made public on April 30 when the tender Anemone brought to New Bedford the twenty-three survivors of the collier Seacomet. The ship's seams opened while she was being pounded by the seas in Vineyard Sound, and although the crew manned the pumps, assisted by the wife of the third mate, and put forth herculean efforts the steamer settled and sank just after the crew had taken to the boats. Seven who embarked in one of the boats have not since been heard of, and it is feared they were drowned.

Survivors of the Seacomet in lifeboat (centre) who were first taken on board the Vineyard Sound lightship (on right) and later transferred to the lightship tender Anemone (left) and carried by her to New Bedford. Twenty-three were saved, but seven of the crew are missing and are supposed to be lost.

UNITED STATES BATTLESHIP
RETURNING FROM MANOEUVRES

Photograph taken from the Manhattan Bridge of the U. S. S. Wyoming steaming up the East River on her return from the recent battle practice of the fleet off the coast of Panama. She was on her way to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where she will await further orders. The recent manoeuvres have been of especial interest because they involved the battleships of both the Atlantic and Pacific fleets and because of the demonstration that has been afforded that the Panama Canal was not immune from the attacks of hostile fleets. Secretary Denby and a Congressional Committee were keen and interested observers of the manoeuvres, and a large amount of material was gathered as a basis for future legislation.

(International.)

THE naval manoeuvres off the Panama coast have given cause for serious thought on the part of the Navy Department and the Congressional Committee that accompanied Secretary Denby on the cruise. It has been found that some of the heavy guns of the American dreadnaughts are not capable of the elevation that would make them more effective. It is claimed that the navies of other powers have solved this problem and that the ships of our own nation would be handicapped if they did not follow suit. Congress at its last session made an appropriation of $6,500,000 for elevating the guns of thirteen of the dreadnaughts. Official opinion in the navy, from Secretary Denby down, seems to be almost unanimous that the modernization program is permissible under the treaty drawn up at the Washington Conference. Some officials have suggested that while the actual work is being held in abeyance precautions should be taken which would lessen the danger of the American fleet being caught unawares. They would have master dies and patterns of the more intricate parts necessary to gun elevation manufactured and stored at bases for use in an emergency, so that the period of tieup might be reduced. It has been estimated that three months would be required under normal conditions to complete the modernization of a battleship. It was stated on April 26 that the Harding Administration had abandoned the idea of greater gun elevation for the present and that the money appropriated for that purpose would not be expended unless Congress should give further directions in the case. Prior to this announcement the State Department had been studying provisions of the treaty to determine whether the work on American ships could be executed without violating the naval convention, either in letter or spirit, and a great mass of information had been secured from naval attachés in foreign capitals.

THE epidemic of accidents illustrated by the wrecked automobile here shown still continues despite all admonitions and efforts of the authorities to prevent recklessness in driving. This car was wrecked and three of its occupants killed while driving at a terrific speed in the city of Cincinnati. That the speed was "terrific" in the heart of the crowded city is sufficient condemnation of the driver, and little pity need be wasted on the fate of the boisterous joy riders. The lamentable fact here is, however, that in a great many cases the innocent suffer for the guilty, as in the case of a Philadelphia clubman, recently reported, who while intoxicated drove his automobile at full tilt through a crowd of people waiting for a street car, killing three of them instantly. It is a satisfaction to know that in that case the reckless driver, despite his wealth and influence, was sentenced to a term in prison. A Detroit Judge before whom speeders were frequently brought conceived an idea of taking the delinquents through the hospital and the morgue, where they could see the crippled and dead victims of lawlessness. It seems as though the time had come when fines should no longer be imposed, but prison sentences substituted in their place. In many cases the laws themselves are sufficient, but too much laxity is shown in their administration. There is no reason why women and children should be daily sacrificed to this insatiable Moloch of reckless driving.

We are not so sure, however, that that approval will be extended to the system of education to which it is stated they are obliged to conform. It is said that fairy tales are banished from their reading, which is confined strictly to the facts of life. It will be questioned by many whether facts alone are sufficient mental nourishment for children of tender years and whether little ones are not to a great extent impoverished by never hearing of Cinderella, Santa Claus or any other of the charming fables that have delighted and enthralled the child mind from time immemorial.

By an oversight the railroad wreck pictured in our issue of April 26 was stated to have occurred on the Great Northern Railroad. This was an error which we deeply regret. In the last five years the Great Northern has carried approximately 36,000,000 people without killing a single passenger.

FLEET-FOOTED ATHLETES IN INTERCOLLEGiate RELAY RACE

Runners speeding around the turn in one of the relay races that features the great athletic intercollegiate carnival at Franklin Field. A crowd of 35,000 witnessed the closing day of the carnival, which was the largest gathering that ever attended a field and track meet in this country. They were rewarded by seeing sport of a dazzling order, especially in the relay races that marked the victory of American athletes over the visiting Oxford University runners. (International.)

ONE of the brightest chapters in the world's athletic history was written on Franklin Field April 24, when Pennsylvania State College's remarkable relay quartet defeated Oxford University in the two-mile college relay championship of America and hung up a new world's record of 7 minutes 48 4-5 seconds.

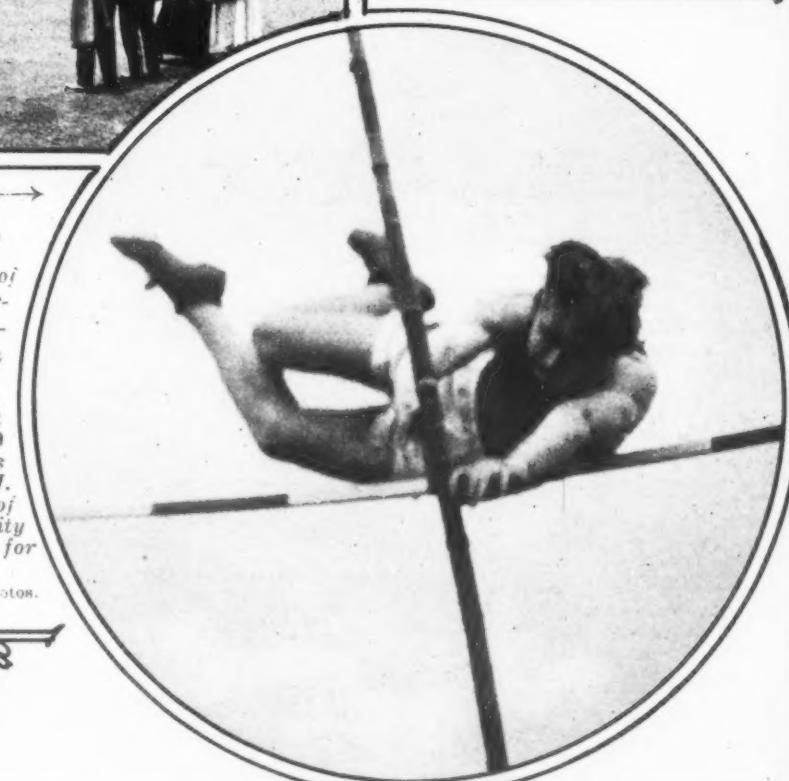

The blue and white of Penn State was carried to victory over England's picked team of invaders on the flashing heels of Allan Helffrich, a New York boy, who holds the national half-mile title. Running in a driving rain as anchor man for his alma mater in the closing half-mile of the championship race, Helffrich flashed one of the greatest races of his brilliant career and brought victory to Penn State by a margin of about thirty yards over the dark blue wearers of Oxford.

COLUMBIA'S VICTORY

Columbia's varsity and junior varsity eight-oared shells swept down the Schuylkill River April 28 in the Child's Cup regatta, decisively winning from the Pennsylvania and Princeton crews, which finished second and third, respectively, in both events. The blue and white varsity crew took the lead with a well-timed racing start, and although the Penn oarsmen pulled their boat to a four-foot lead as the half-mile mark was neared, the Columbia crew showed a great store of reserve power and regained the upper hand before another quarter of a mile was passed. Coach Jim Rice's crew finished with a lead of a full three lengths over Penn, while the latter shell was separated from the Tiger boat by nearly three lengths of open water. The time for the race, which was rowed over the Henley distance, one mile and five-sixteenths, was 7 minutes and 44 seconds.

"The Devil's Disciple": Bernard Shaw Play

Climactic moment in the first act of the "Devil's Disciple," at the Garrick Theatre, New York, when Dick Dudgeon (Basil Sydney), who plays the title rôle, leaps upon the table following the reading of his father's will, which left him sole heir to the estate, and proclaims his allegiance to the devil. His hearers stand aghast. Behind him with upraised hands stands the minister, Anthony Anderson (Moffat Johnston), while the minister's young wife Judith, at right (Lotus Robb), looks upon him with a certain terror struggling with admiration.

Dick, at the minister's invitation, has called at the latter's house and is invited to stay to tea. A sudden parish call takes the minister from the house and leaves Dick alone with Judith. She tells him that she abhors him for his doctrines, but her eyes belie her words. A British Sergeant (the time is 1777 and the place near Albany, N. Y.) comes to arrest the minister, who is to be hanged in order to overawe the rebels. He mistakes Dick for the clergyman and the latter, yielding to a noble impulse of self-sacrifice, does not undeceive him. He is permitted to bid his supposed wife farewell, and to carry out the deception kisses her ardently. Judith returns the kiss, falls fainting and Dick is led away by his captors.

(Below.) Court-martial, nominally presided over by Major Swindon (Reginald Goode), in background, but actually controlled by General Burgoyne (Roland Young), seated at right. They go through the form of trying Dick (seated at left), although his death has already been decided on. The prisoner brings the members of the court-martial to their feet in indignation as he denounces King George III. as a lunatic. Dick is sentenced to be hung at noon and Burgoyne, who is affability itself, expresses the hope that he will die like a gentleman. Dick urges him to have no fear on that point.

Dick in the courtyard with a rope about his neck and the soldiers ready at a signal to draw the wagon from beneath him. At right is Judith kneeling in anguish. She had previously visited him in prison seeking to compass his escape and promising to go with him to the end of the world. There is a commotion without and Anderson, who has laid aside his clergyman's coat for a soldier's uniform and has been indefatigable in his efforts to save Dick, bursts upon the scene with a summons to Burgoyne from the American Commander-in-Chief to surrender. The British General, who has already realized that his case is desperate, accepts the summons and prepares to discuss it with the American emissary. The execution is abruptly halted, the rope taken from Dick's neck and he is freed. The brief romance of Judith and Dick is closed forever.

BABY ATHLETE OF UNUSUAL PROMISE

Danny, a little foundling in the Mothers' Institute, Jersey City, N.J., who, though but five months old, is showing phenomenal development. His endurance and exhibitions of physical strength are considered remarkable by the physicians and nurses. His favorite exercise is to lift himself by catching hold of a steel rod and to swing clear of his cot. He gurgles gleefully when allowed to hang from the thumbs of an adoring nurse. Danny was abandoned in a hallway last December when he was a day old.

In Comfortable Shoes You'll Enjoy Your Spring Clothes

HOW colorful the shops are this time of year, with their showings of smart Spring costumes! You stand before their windows and imagine yourself looking your best in this, that, and the other, which you decide to purchase. You see yourself wearing them for shopping, an afternoon of Bridge, motoring out into the country, or a pleasant stroll on Sunday. But these, and other pleasures, are more enjoyable if your feet are comfortable in light, trim Cantilever Shoes.

Women are beginning to realize that it is hard to be charming and attractive if the feet are uncomfortable. When shoes pinch, wrinkles of pain and irritation form in the face. You cannot feel or look your best under such a physical handicap, nor when the body is tilted to a harmful angle all day by high heels. And if the arches of your feet are weakened by stiff, unyielding shoes, your general health and energy suffer.

Good Looking Shoes

Cantilever Shoes are made with consideration for the good taste of smartly dressed women, as well as for the requirements of the foot. The neatly rounded toe gives ample room. The natural sole line has not detracted from the pleasing swing of the shoe. The low, medium or Cuban heels are in accord with the dictates of the best style authorities for daytime wear.

The flexible arch which gently supports the arch of your foot gives to the foot a trim, well-fitted appearance seldom found in shoes that do not follow the curve of the arch so snugly. It also permits strengthening exercise to the muscles of the foot which hold the bones up in an arched position.

Reasonably Priced

Cantilever Shoes are reasonably priced. They are finely made of splendid materials in stylish shades. They are always trade-marked. Outside of New York City and Chicago, there is only one store in each city that sells Cantilevers. If no dealer listed in the column at the left is near you, write the manufacturers, Morse & Burt Co., 11 Carlton Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., for the name of a nearby dealer, and for their latest booklet, which tells how much your health depends upon shoes.
